Ernest Johnson of the Associated Negro Press who accompanied President Edwin Barclay of Liberia on his American tour will have an article analyzing the Liberian Mission to the United States.

There will be also an article on the work of the CIO in combatting racial discrimination within and without the ranks of organized labor.

The story by Chester B. Himes, "So Softly Smiling," promised for September, will appear in October.

Editorials

The Harlem Riot

THERE were many sound, sensible editorial expressions on the Harlem riot from all sections of the country, but of the 346 daily newspaper editorials examined in this office, the one by the Richmond, Va., Times Dispatch easily ranks with the worst. To counteract the Times Dispatch, easily one of the best was from the neighboring Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. Louis I. Jaffe is still the scholarly and thoughtful editor of the Norfolk morning daily, while our old "friend," Virginius Dabney bosses the editorial page of the Richmond morning paper.

Dabney's diatribe entitled, "Dixie's Fault, Of Course," is unworthy of him, even considering his obsession with the idea that northern Negro agitators are responsible for all the racial tension in the country. Dabney sneers at the idea that mistreatment of Negro soldiers in the South could have had anything whatsoever to do with sparking the riot of August 1-2 in far-away Harlem. It is this type of thinking which has made riots possible, this failure to realize that there is widespread knowledge and resentment of the general treatment of the race and particularly of the Negro soldier.

A soldier in uniform was shot by a policeman in Harlem. The question of who was right and who was wrong at the moment did not interest the mob. Mobs, white or black, don't reason. The white Beaumont mob did not reason. A white woman had not been raped, but you could not tell them that—not that night. So, in Harlem the wildfire story was of the shooting of a Negro soldier in uniform by a civilian policeman.

Negro soldiers have been shot down by civilian police in Alexandria, La., in Little Rock, Ark., in Baltimore, Md., in Beaumont, Tex., and in a half dozen other places. They have been humiliated, manhandled, and beaten in countless instances.

The Harlem mob knew all this. It hated all this. It could not reach the Arkansas cop who fired a full magazine of his revolver into the prone body of a Negro sergeant, or any of the others, so it tore up Harlem. It was a wild, senseless, criminal action, the boiling over of people who felt they could not get the Dabneys, the Connallys, or even the Roosevelts, much less the War department, the governors, the mayors, the chiefs of police to listen and act.

For his own purposes Dabney has caricatured the picture. Harlem's riot was not exclusively and solely the fault of Dixie. It was New York City's riot and New York City must bear its share of blame. All the old problems are there; and New York is a part of America, in many ways very like Dixie. But the stimulant in this particular instance did come from below the Mason and Dixon line; every Negro feels that in his bones, and white men, in Richmond as in New York, should understand it. In the minds of Harlemites that Sunday night the gun in the hands of a good New York policeman doing his duty was the gun in the hands of Dixie cops shooting down men in the uniform, if you please, of the Army of Democracy. That's the fact, much too big and much too bitter to be laughed away.

Labor-Negro Politics

ORGANIZED labor is up in arms over the anti-labor, generally reactionary performance of the Congress during the first seven months of 1943. The CIO has held several conferences on political action and has set up an organization whose object is to work for the defeat of anti-labor representatives and senators. The A. F. of L. is also studying political action.

What stirred Labor more than any other one item was the passage of the Smith-Connally anti-strike bill. Negroes know all about the men who have led the anti-labor drive in Congress. They are the same men who have led anti-Negro drives where such drives have been necessary. They have blocked the Negro's legitimate aspirations at every turn. They have fought anti-lynching bills, anti-poll tax bills. They chopped down the OWI appropriation because OWI had printed a booklet about Negroes and the war. They wiped out NYA because NYA was training Negroes for industrial jobs. They came within a hairsbreadth of killing FSA, and one of the main reasons was that FSA was aiding Negro tenants and 'sharecroppers to become small farm owners.

The whole story is not as simple as that, because many factors enter into a political equation, but in general it may be said that the men who fight Negroes also fight labor.

Tom Connally, for example, co-author of the anti-strike bill, led the filibuster in the Senate against the anti-lynching bill.

Negroes are also aroused over the antics of the 78th Congress and are determined to act in the coming elections. They have watched northern Republicans and Democrats join the southern anti-Negro reactionaries from poll-tax states to defeat measures which would have aided the Negro and to pass measures which have hurt him.

There are signs that organized labor at last realizes that anti-Negro Congressmen are the enemies of Labor. Negroes are slowly learning that people who fight labor are fighting Negroes as well. If their political leaders are smart, Negroes and Labor will work out a joint program of action. A good beginning project is the anti-poll tax bill. Until the poll tax is wiped away, Labor hasn't a chance of reaching the men who now lead the reactionaries.

The strategy obviously indicated for the present is for Labor and the Negro to say to northern and western senators that they dare not join with the poll taxers on this legislation, that any filibuster on it must be broken, and that those who connive or who sit idly by must answer to both Negro and Labor voters at the polls.

Forced Labor Again

IT is reported in no less a journal than the esteemed and well-informed New York Herald Tribune that President Roosevelt has been won over to the view that Congress must pass a bill to draft labor.

The Congress now has before it the Austin-Wadsworth bill which is not even a thinly disguised forced labor act. It takes little imagination for colored people to understand what such a bill will do to them. It will place in the hands of administrators the right to freeze Negroes in certain types of work, to remove them from some localities and jobs and force them to new places and new work. There will be virtually no chance to escape from low-paid occupations to better paid jobs.

Such a bill would be bad enough if there were iron-clad guarantees that the color line would be ignored in its administration, but everyone knows no such guarantees can be given or enforced. In the section where most Negroes live, and where they receive the lowest wages, they would be, if the Austin-Wadsworth bill is passed, at the mercy of the people who now exploit them, and who are angry at the whole war program for "luring" them away from the starvation wages and miserable working conditions of the area.

The Austin-Wadsworth bill should be defeated.

Smuts Speaks of Africa, 1917-1942

By Rayford W. Logan

FIELD Marshal Jan Christian Smuts, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, a British Dominion, probably ranks second only to Churchill in the influence that he wields both within and without the British Commonwealth and Empire. Frequent reports about a forthcoming visit to the United States make timely an examination of Smuts's views on African policies.

In this article I have presented these views as he has expressed them over a period of twenty-five years. Only in this way can the reader judge for himself whether Smuts is "one of the most vicious forces in the world today" or "one of the great statesmen of the modern world." Above all, one can compare what changes if any he has made in his views between World War I and World War II. This comparison is especially important with respect to segregation which, according to some persons in the United States, he has now abandoned.

The problem in South Africa, which consists of the four provinces of the Cape, Natal, Orange Free State, and Transvaal, is an extremely difficult one. Whereas in the United States the white people are in a large majority, in the Union some 2,000,000 Britons and Boers live in the midst of about 250,000 Asiatics, some 7,000,000 Africans<sup>1</sup> and about 800,000 Coloured, many of whom can hardly be distinguished from Europeans.

Land and labor, in the opinion of practically all writers on Africa, are the crucial factors. If the Native Land and Trust Act of 1936 should be carried out, the total land available for occupation by Africans, who constitute eighty-eight per cent of the rural population, will amount to about thirteen per cent. At the present time the Africans, almost nine-tenths of the rural population, have about one-tenth of the land.

The so-called Colour Bar Law of 1926 authorizes the government to make regulations providing that certificates of competency shall be granted only to Europeans and to certain classes of Coloured persons. In practice the law applies almost wholly to certain mining operations. But the trade unions effectively bar skilled African and Coloured workers in practically all skilled trades.

<sup>1</sup> The term "Africans" as used here is something of a misnomer since permanent European settlers also have the right to be called Africans. I am using the term in preference to "Natives," except in direct quotations, because "Natives" is offensive even when spelled with a capital letter.

The American Negro can see the parallels between South African philosophy and the practices in Dixie, although Dixie is, admittedly, far in advance of Smuts

European workers in South Africa are among the most highly paid in the world. They receive these abnormally high wages because the African and Coloured workers are grossly underpaid. According to Lord Hailey's African Survey (p. 684), "the general ratio of native to European wages [in the secondary industries] would appear to be roughly 1 to 5, as compared with 1 to 8, or 1 to 6 . . . in the mines. In Europe the common ratio of skilled to unskilled wages is estimated at 7 to 5 in the building and engineering trades."

The franchise was limited until 1936, as far as Africans and Coloured were concerned, almost entirely to a few in the Cape Province. In 1853 they were given the right to vote and theoretically to elect Africans and Coloured to the South African Parliament. This latter right was withdrawn in 1909. In 1934 there were only about 10,000 African and Coloured voters in the Cape, about 2.7 per cent of the total electorate. In Natal registration was made so difficult that there were never more than three Africans who had acquired the right to vote. In Transvaal and Orange Free State, Africans and Coloured had never exercised the right to vote for members of Parliament. A decisive change was made in 1936. The Representation of Natives Act changed the Cape franchise so that the Africans and Coloured, instead of voting in a general election for white members of the South African Parliament, now vote in a separate election for three European members of the Lower House and for two white members of the Provincial Council. This Act also extended the franchise to a small number of Africans and Coloured in the three other provinces. Together with the Africans and Coloured in the Cape they vote for four Europeans in the Senate who deal with "Native Affairs" and for twelve African and Coloured members of the Natives Representative Council. Of the other ten members of this Council, four are nominated African and Coloured and six are nominated whites. The Council has only advisory powers. In 1930 the European franchise had been extended to all white women over twenty-one.

The idea of trusteeship gained international attention when it was made one of the underlying principles of the Mandate System, established by Article XXII of the Covenant of the League of Nations. It means, in the words of that article, "that the well-being and development" of backward peoples "form a sacred trust of civilization, and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in this Covenant. The best method of giving practical effect to this principle is that the tutelage of such peoples should be entrusted to advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or their geographical position, can best undertake this responsibility, and who are willing to accept it, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as Mandatories on behalf of the League."

General Smuts's attitude on the participation of Africans in the armed forces of their country was also made clear in this same article. It provides for the prevention "of military training of natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory."

Africans Called Simple

Against this introductory background, let us now examine Smuts's own statements of his views and policies. In May, 1917, in London he emphasized the necessity for unity between the two white races "because in South Africa we are not only a white man's country. Our problem of racial unity is being solved in the midst of a black environment." Some people doubted that they would ever succeed in "making a white man's land of Southern Africa; but at any rate we mean to press on with the experiment." Unfortunately, some Christian missionaries in the first part of the nineteenth century had married African wives "to prove their full belief in human brotherhood." Now, however, "we have gained sufficient experience . . . to smile at that point of view. With us there are certain axioms now in regard to the relations of white and black; and the principal one is 'no intermixture of blood between the two colours.' . . . It has now become an accepted axiom in our dealings with the natives that it is dishonourable to mix white and black blood." (He repeated in 1937 his opposition to the "stigma" of mixed marriages.)<sup>2</sup>

The Africans, he continued, "have the simplest minds, understand only the simplest ideas or ideals, and are almost animal-like in the simplicity of their minds and ways." A successful African policy would therefore have to proceed along the simplest moral lines. The policy in which he placed his faith was "Parallelism" which he explained as follows: "Instead of mixing up black and white in the old hap-hazard way, which instead of lifting up the black degraded the white, we are now trying to lay down a policy of keeping them apart, and in that way laying down in outline a general policy which it may take a hundred years to work out, but which in the end may be the solution of our native problem. Thus in South Africa you will have in the long run areas cultivated by blacks and governed by blacks, where they will look after themselves in all their forms of living and development while in the rest of the country you will have your white communities, which will govern themselves separately according to accepted European principles. The natives will, of course, be free to go and work in white areas, but as far as possible the administration of white and black areas will be separate."

Smuts then alluded to a serious danger which threatened not only Southern Africa but also Europe, namely, powerful black armies. He hoped that "one of the results of this war will be some arrangement or convention among the nations interested in Central Africa by which the military training of natives will be prevented, as we have prevented it in South Africa."<sup>3</sup>

On May 27, 1920, he again advocated local self-government for the Africans "before marching forward along the path of territorial segregation, which still remains the goal." He especially advocated local self-government at that time because the existing educational system was "wholly unsuited to native needs and positively pernicious, leading the native to a dead wall over which he is unable to rise. There he becomes a ready prey for the agitator aiming at poisoning his mind against the European." In October of that year he expressed his fear of a small but growing political party which was trying to bring about "a social and economic revolution and behind them was the spectre of Bolshevism, which made even the Labourites nervous. And the natives meantime, observing all this, had begun to talk of their African Republic."<sup>4</sup>

Prime Minister General Smuts, Commander-in-Chief of the South African forces is shown here during a visit last year to the South African troops stationed in East Africa. Unlike Belgian Congo troops and the French Senegalese and some British West African troops, the South African fighting units are composed of white men only. South African natives are used only as laborers in line with Smuts' policy of not arming black troops

Opposed Colour Bar Bill

Smuts has been frequently praised for his opposition to the Colour Bar Bill already mentioned. This examination suggests that he has received too much praise. In various speeches, beginning February 25, 1925, he asked the Hertzog Government to withdraw the Bill and refer it to a Select Committee. He opposed the Bill, first because it denied the Africans economic opportunities before providing them with sufficient land in their reserves; second, because it placed a "stigma" upon Asiatics "in the grossest form by coupling natives and Asiatics"; third, because "the colour bar had never appeared in the legislation of the country and to put it into law, was an unnecessary affront to the natives"; fourth, because if the Bill were passed, "the natives would lose their confidence of receiving justice from the white man." When Hertzog refused to permit an African General Council to present a petition against the Bill, Smuts pointed out that the refusal would have "the very worst effect on the native mind," and he urged "the Government to go out of its way to stretch every rule of law and procedure to allow the natives and Asiatics whose rights are being taken away by a house in which they are practically unrepresented to be heard before the Select Committee."<sup>7</sup>

Early in 1926 when the Hertzog Government reintroduced the Bill, Smuts continued his opposition to it and demanded again that it be referred to a Select Committee before which the Africans would be permitted to appear. On February 4 the Bill passed the House, with Hertzog's supporters (except two) voting for it and Smuts' supporters solidly arrayed against it. In the closing debate Smuts took a position that has been generally overlooked: "The Opposition, General Smuts asserted, would have no objection to legalization of the Colour Bar as it has existed for the last 12 years. Let a Parliamentary draughtsman recast the Bill in such form that it went no further than stereotyping and legalising the existing colour bar, and the Opposition would consent to pass the measure as an agreed Bill." Some four months later he reiterated his regret that South Africa for the first time in her history had passed a law "which publicly and openly branded a very large portion of the people." The African had been told that "in this country of his birth and of his fathers he should remain a hewer of wood and a drawer of water." Smuts also stated again "that there had been a colour bar here for years and years and the native people had not bothered much about it."<sup>8</sup>

Against Minimum Wage

Smuts also opposed Hertzog's Minimum Wage Bill. While the cost of living was higher for the whites, he pointed out, then for the Africans, "the Minimum Wage Bill would place them all on an equality." The Bill would give the Africans far higher wages than they received at that time, "probably 5s. or 6s. [about $1.00 or $1.20] a day. He did not see it could be otherwise for a white man could not live on less and the wages of black and white were to be equal." Under these circumstances white workers would be preferred, but there simply were not enough white workers to meet the demand. The Bill excluded domestics and farm workers. "But would the natives on the farms be content to work for a small wage and food if they could get work in the towns for 5s. or 6s. a day?" South Africa, he further warned,

"could only progress if existing circumstances were reckoned with. There must be a difference between the wages for white and black." He was not "opposed to the natives but the natives did not ask for the increased wages which were quite unnecessary." In another speech on the Bill he first praised the Africans for helping the Union to occupy a position of world importance "out of all proportion to our small white population." He then added: "The Wages Act now proposed to give natives equal pay with whites for the same work, and if that were done, the position would be impossible." Amid great applause he drove home the fact that the influential position which the Union held at Geneva was due "to many causes, and one was the reasonable use made of the natives for the development of South Africa."<sup>9</sup> According to Lord Hailey's African Survey (p. 1370) the Union, instead of adopting a Minimum Wage for even white workers has preferred to maintain a "civilized labour" policy by saying "that certain types of work should be reserved to white unskilled workers."

Africans "Not Ready" for Vote

Smuts also opposed Hertzog's Bill to extend the African franchise from Cape Province to the other three provinces. "The old traditions of South Africa," he insisted, "were opposed to the extension of the franchise to the native. He always held that they could not force Parliamentary institutions on people until they were ready for them. The natives should be taught gradually to rule themselves, but there should be no mingling of white and black. The natives should have their own small council and deal with their own interests. He doubted whether an Angel from Heaven could provide them with an instant solution of the question."<sup>10</sup>

Smuts strongly favored white immigration into the Union, since "our white population is steadily decreasing and it is humiliating to think that immigrants are passing by to go to Rhodesia, and that even our own white population are emigrating from the Union. We want to solve the national problem, not by suppressing the native population, but by strengthening the white population, and I hope that in the years to come we will be able to govern this country in such a way that the members of our white population will grow to such strength that they will feel there is no threat to their future from the natives." He went even further when in 1928 he stated that "he was willing, . . . to take anybody to his bosom, Jew or Gentile, coming to this country with a determination to make it big. A bigger white population would also solve South Africa's 'poor white' problem."<sup>11</sup>

In September, 1928, he made one of his rare speeches to a group of non-Europeans. A speaker on behalf of the African and Coloured people said that the Coloured people wanted a share in public employment, while the Africans wanted information about segregation, the proposed abolition of their franchise rights, and their ineligibility for old age pensions. In addition, they protested against the African poll tax. General Smuts in reply referred with appreciation to the way in which the African and Coloured population kept the laws of the country and the way in which they had stood by the Government during the bitter days of the last war. Many of the young Coloured people had gone with him to German East Africa and had fought with him, while many Africans had gone to work in France. "I have never had before the opportunity to thank you," said General Smuts, "and I do so to-day. I hope you will always stay in the road of obedience to the law." He congratulated the African and Coloured people on the progress they had made. "Of course," he declared, "you cannot have as much done for you as is being done for the whites, but if you are patient your circumstances will always be improved." He also advised them to beware of agitators. Old-age pensions had been provided for only whites and Coloured, but not for the Africans. He hoped that once the Government had acquired "sufficient knowledge of the new scheme then the native population would also be taken into consideration."<sup>12</sup>

Politics "No Solution"

During the electoral campaign of 1928-1929 Smuts made some of his most important speeches. Early in the campaign he stated that his party, the South African Party (S A P S), "did not want the natives disturbed by politics; they wanted the natives to be fairly treated, and their policy was one of improved conditions, extension of councils and local self-government. They wanted to meet the practical needs of today instead of going afield, trying to inaugurate political changes which white people did not want, and of which the natives were suspicious." Later he reiterated that "for me and my party the solution of the native question lies not in political development." The Africans did not "hanker after political rights. . . . They do not want the right to vote. They want fair treatment. . . . In my opinion to govern the native properly is of far more importance than worrying over his vote. The great danger to be guarded against is lawlessness among the natives. . . . The Government should follow this policy: let them treat the natives fairly, relieve them where the shoe pinches, and treat them firmly where there are dangerous movements." He was determined not to let the Hertzog Government raise the issue of a white South Africa, for such an issue "can only result in misery for South Africans, both white and black."<sup>18</sup>

Later he asserted that "the Nationalist native policy, by giving franchise to the Coloured and native peoples, was a menace to white civilization. The greatest danger in General Hertzog's native policy, said General Smuts, was his proposal to extend the dangers which threatened the whites in the Cape to the Free State, Natal and Transvaal." He again denied that the policy of his party "contained anything that indicated the granting of equal rights to whites and natives." He did, however, insist that his Party stood for "the fair treatment of the native people, with whom good relations should exist." Smuts then "accused" Prime Minister Hertzog of "having spoken in favour of giving the vote to the Cape Coloured women who had reached the same civilization as the white women at such time as the white women of the country were enfranchised." And yet, "I am accused of wishing to extend the Cape native franchise to the North and of wishing to give the vote to the native women. I am not going to open the door to native franchise in the North unless I know that the people of South Africa are fully aware of the significance of the step. Neither am I going to take away the Cape native vote unless the matter has been given the fullest consideration."

Denies Shaking Hands

He criticised The Pact (the coalition of the Nationalist and Labour Parties) of paying Africans eight shillings a day on the railways while "white men with a family received 3s. 6d. or 5s. a day. This was not solving the poor white problem. It was making white men into Kaffirs. The S. A. P. would not dismiss a single man who could do his work, but they would see that white men lived on a civilised standard. . . . Asked whether he favoured women's votes for white and black, General Smuts said he proposed to class native women all over the Union with native men and leave their case to the National Convention. He did not propose to include them in the Woman's Enfranchisement Bill. . . .

General Smuts was asked whether he ever received a bouquet from the natives or shook hands with them. General Smuts denied it amid laughter."<sup>18</sup>

In a reply to a question about his segregation policy, Smuts stated that this was "a most dangerous question to raise." But his position was quite clear. He believed in "segregation regarding land only—and to that he held." He again attacked Hertzog for wanting to give the Africans parliamentary representation, which was approved by neither the Africans nor the whites, and he again called for a National Convention on the subject. "General Smuts said that he had served South Africa well enough not to be subjected to the charge of wanting a black South Africa. He denied that the South African Party wanted equal rights for black and white."<sup>18</sup>

For White Dominion

Soon after this defeat Smuts delivered the Rhodes Memorial Lectures at Oxford. He believed that the time had come to establish in the heart of Africa another white dominion as "a bulwark for civilization." At the present time there was a slackening because of an entirely creditable attitude. This was "the humanitarian feeling which has been on the increase since the Great War, which sides with the under-dog, which produces the policy of Africa for the Africans, that is, for the natives; which holds that Africa is a black continent, the home of the negro and negroid peoples, and that it should remain such." Smuts admitted that white civilisation had resulted in many abuses, most of which had disappeared. He hoped that "depriving natives of their land or of the land which is reasonably required for their present or future needs should also be out of the question." There was no need for white immigration in any way to reduce this amount of land. It fitted in with the character and training of the Africans to accept the "firm handling, the lead and the mastery of the white employer." Indeed, "the easiest, the most natural and obvious way to civilize the African native is to give him decent white employment. White employment is his best school; the gospel of labour is the most salutary gospel for him. . . . Without a large European population as a continuous support and guarantee of that civilization and as an ever-present practical example and stimulus for the natives, I fear that civilization will not endure for long." He denied that there was any essential incompatibility between white and African interests. "Granting in principle that native interests should rank first, I still submit that white settlement under proper safeguards still remains the best means to give effect to that priority." Without the guiding hand of white civilization, Africa might "relapse to her historic and prehistoric slumbers."

African "Child Type"

In the second lecture on African problems Smuts reiterated the necessity for promoting the cause of civilization in Africa without injustice to the African. The Negro and Negroid Bantu peoples had many fine characteristics, and Africa may have been the cradle of civilization. But the Africans had largely remained "a child type, with a child psychology and outlook. A childlike human cannot be a bad human, for are we not in spiritual matters bidden to be like unto little children? Perhaps as a direct result of this temperament the African is the only happy human I have ever come across. No other race is so easily satisfied, so carefree. . . . It is clear that a race so unique, and so different in its mentality and its cultures from those of Europe, requires a policy very unlike that which would suit Europeans. . . . The British Empire does not stand for assimilation of its peoples into a common type, it does not stand for standardization, but for the freest development of its peoples along their own specific lines."

He, therefore, planned to follow the policy of Cecil Rhodes of developing African local self-government, and of individual land ownership. About two-thirds of the Africans in Cape Province, something over a million, managed their own local affairs according to their own ideas under the supervision of European magistrates. He then expressed the hope "that before many years have passed the greater portion of the native population of South Africa will be in charge of their own local affairs, under general white supervision."

But the events of the recent years had tended to cause the disintegration of local self-government. It was therefore necessary to take vigorous steps to restore or preserve the authority of the local chiefs. He based his own policy upon the principle of trusteeship in the mandate system. This could "only mean the progress and civilization of these backward peoples in accordance with their own institutions, customs and ideas in so far as these are not incompatible with the ideals of civilization." This would mean also separate and parallel institutions wherever Europeans and Africans lived in the same country. "The old practice mixed up black and white in the same institutions; . . . But in the new plan there will be what is called

Will a Long War Aid the Negro?

Benjamin Quarles

AN examination of the current assumption that a long war will work to the advantage of the Negro will result in some doubts. Obviously a long-drawn out conflict will create increasingly wide job opportunities for Negroes of both sexes. On the fighting fronts a long war will perhaps witness an increasingly democratic integration of the Negro into the various services. A government prosecuting a war of indefinite duration and thus anxious to effect a sense of unity among its citizenry, may be expected to strive to remove or neutralize the grosser irritants which make for race friction. Another point advanced is that a long period of rapid and far-reaching change (such as a long war will entail) is the precise time to wage an all-out attack on traditional prejudices, ago-old stereotypes and deep-seated fixations. Social conflicts and economic maladjustments are easier of solution in a period of fluid culture change.

There have been evidences of some of these things. However, Negroes must remember that a long drawn out war will very likely create a national psychosis which would indefinitely delay a solution to the American race problem. War brings many fine examples of heroism and self-sacrifice, especially on the battlefield, but war also breeds misunderstanding, fear and hatred on a global scale. Like the genie in the story we may find it difficult to put back into the bottle some of the forces we have found it necessary to uncork.

To react emotionally has valuable elements of morale; it enables a people at war to see it through. But the American race problem needs people who are prepared to think it through. A difficult problem in social behavior is solved satisfactorily only by an appeal to common sense and understanding. Perhaps historically we have expected too much of man's use of reason, but a reliance on this faculty is our chief guarantee for an equitable solution to a besetting problem. An America that has fought a long and grueling war—an America in a state of spiritual and psychological exhaustion and faced by vexatious reconstruction problems at home and abroad would be in no mood to consider calmly and fairly the legitimate claims of the Negro.

The author advances interesting arguments on the question currently debated wherever colored Americans gather and talk

Threat of Fascism

To the Negro there is another danger. The longer the war lasts, the greater the threat to the American form of government. Power must be concentrated in a time like this; a war cannot be conducted along the lines of a Gallup poll. But after a long war, to expect a return to the states and to the people of the sweeping war-time controls which the national government has assumed and in whose exercise it has become habituated, is to expect an unusual degree of self-renunciation. "Power corrupts," wrote Lord Acton, "and absolute power, absolutely." In the exigencies of a long war our government may with the best (or most unconscious) of intentions succeed in fastening upon the country a totalitarianism that is no less political and psychological than military and economic.

A fascist regime would not profit the Negro. Under this form of organized tyranny, a racial minority has no rights. In America, all citizens (and this includes minority groups) have constitutional guarantees that the state and national governments shall not act arbitrarily. This is not to say that these guarantees are universally observed. But in a fascist country, a racial minority is persecuted by the state and its agents. Under fascism, a racial minority is hounded and harassed in accordance with the law, and not contrary to it. In this country, persecution of minorities is not legal; a government official who terrorizes minorities does so in violation of his oath. When minorities are deprived of their fundamental rights, the action is in violation of the constitution. The point is pertinent because it is along this line—the line of invoking constitutional privileges and immunities—that minority groups in America hope to attain full citizenship rights.

Those who feel that a long war will benefit the Negro point to the rise in wages that goes hand in hand with the current shortage in the labor market. But in wartime the rise in wages seldom keeps pace with the increased cost of living plus the heavier burden of taxation. Many Negro workers are learning a lesson that preceding generation learned from World War I; namely, that wars do not increase real wages.

No Reward For Bravery

The supporters of the long-war theory have one final point that bears attention. A long war, it is asserted, will afford a splendid opportunity for the Negro to display his valor on the fighting front and his loyal support on the home front and thus win a gratitude that will be tangibly rewarded.

This belief is not realistic. Meritorious services by Negroes in past wars have not been accompanied by great social gains. As a result of his participation in the Revolutionary War the colored man made some small advances, but after 1780 the sweep of the Industrial Revolution and the invention of the cotton gin so increased the profits of slavery that the movement for emancipation was almost completely arrested. In the Civil War the Negro served with distinction in the Union armies, but the Emancipation Proclamation was issued before a single Negro recruit was officially enlisted, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments were certainly not passed as a reward for Negro bravery on the battlefield. After World War I—and in this war, too, the Negro fought well—the return-

The Crisis disagrees with some of the arguments advanced by Dr. Quarles in support of his thesis. We believe he dismisses in too casual fashion the opposition argument that, to use his own language, "social conflicts . . . are easier of solution in a period of fluid culture change." We believe he has overlooked an important factor, the acquisition and employment of new skills by workers, and has concentrated on the question of real wages. We believe he has greatly undervalued the bargaining power of battlefield bravery in the struggle for advancement, and that history does not support him in the sweeping fashion he claims, although the point has some substance. However, Dr. Quarles has stated one side of a controversial question and we are glad to present that view. Comments are invited from readers.

War and Race Relations: Student Opinion

IN order to implement the Four Freedoms, Americans "should be taking steps now to end discrimination against Negroes in the United States," in the view of 73% of the college students who answered the question last spring in a poll conducted by the Christian Social Reconstruction Commission and the magazine, The Intercollegian.

A total of 12,622 students in 63 colleges in various sections of the country answered 19 questions under seven separate headings, all dealing with post war problems. The sixth section was "Race Relations and the War" and contained five questions. Through the courtesy of the National Intercollegiate Christian Council, parent sponsor of the poll, The Crisis presents the following summary of answers to the race relations questions:

13. Do you think the colored peoples of the world must be guaranteed equal opportunities with white people in order to avoid a third world war?

The majority (54.7%) said "Yes." Comments varied: "All people are created equal!" "They are becoming more intelligent and may demand rights"; and "Yes, but they should remain in their own groups." Many students had difficulty in conceiving that the "colored peoples of the world" included most Asiatic people, Africans, and the mixed-bloods of Latin-America as well as American Negroes. They fail to grasp the fact that the colored peoples outnumber the whites in the world.

Nearly one-third (31.6%) of the students said "No." Comments included, "Colored people will never start a war against whites. However, they should be guaranteed equal opportunities" and "They should be given opportunities but not too many." Students showed a lack of familiarity with the point of view which Shridharani voiced in "Warning to the West."

Russia and Colored People

14. In case we fail to prevent a third world war do you think the Soviet Union is likely to be an ally of the colored peoples of Asia against Britain and the United States?

The large (38.3%) no opinion expressed in answer to this question is significant. "We should be more fully educated about Russia and Asia," was voiced by many. "No opinion" and "No" (39.6%) voters expressed fear and suspicion of Russia, such as "Russia will fight only for her own good—not anybody else's," and "You can never predict what Russia will do." However, some who answered "No" expressed profound ignorance of the social equality in the Soviet Union. "Why should she? She has no more in common with them than we do." The large Mongolian population of the Soviet Union as well as the diverse population, seemed little grasped.

Only 22.1% answered "yes" to this question. Comments included "Russia can be expected to be a focus for the opposition of the colored peoples to our discriminatory policies. There is a tacit bond between the colored peoples and the Soviet Union"; "Yes, if the war is on a racial basis"; and "Britain and the U. S. had better change some of their tariffs and other policies or they will find another war."

15. To help strengthen the confidence of the people of Asia in democracy do you think the United States should now repeal the Oriental Exclusion Act, which denies American citizenship to immigrants from Asia?

The majority (51.2%) who opposed removal of the Oriental Exclusion Act gave both social and economic reasons for their point of view. They fear the immigration of a large number of Oriental people and seem not to be clear that our quota system would keep the number admitted very small. "It would lower our standard of living"; "We had good reasons for the Exclusion Act. Our attitude should be more friendly but we cannot afford to repeal the Act"; "Millions would swarm in now and after the war because of better conditions"; and "These races do not mix in the first place."

Those (28.5%) who answered "yes" are strong in their conviction of "the equality of all people". "It was a mistake in the first place," say some. A large percentage (20.3%) registered no opinion. Many commented that they were not informed.

Would End Discrimination

16. To implement the Four Freedoms all over the world, do you think that Americans should be taking steps now to end discrimination against Negroes in the United States?

Nearly three-fourths (73.6%) of the students said "yes" that they thought discrimination against Negroes should stop. Many said the process "is slow," and asked, "How can we really do it?" "We are only giving lip service to democracy if we continue our present policy of discrimination in regard to Negroes." Of those (15.7%) who opposed, their reasons included, "We cannot take on everything at once"; and "Negroes don't expect that much but should be given more."

17. Should social security for the British people as provided by the Beveridge Plan apply to the people of India and the British colonies in Africa?

More than half (51.3%) agreed that the Beveridge Plan should apply to India and the British Colonies in Africa. "Equal rights for all, in all things should be the policy"; and "If it is due the English it is due the colonies." Many of those (15.2%) who said "No" commented that they thought the colonies should be free and allowed to develop their own economy. However other comments included: "They never could support the plan financially, and the standard of living is too low for them to appreciate the benefits;" and "Illiteracy and security do not go well together." A third of the students (33.5%) expressed "no opinion." Many commented that they did not know what the Beveridge Plan was.

Recreation and Morale

As the strain of war becomes more tense, the relation of recreation to military and civilian morale becomes increasingly important. Even before the formal entrance of the United States into the world struggle, this fact was recognized and provisions were made for coping with the problem by the founding of the United Service Organizations with their far-flung club houses, and the expansion of Red Cross facilities in United Nations' and later in conquered territories.

War is a hard and gruelling struggle requiring tremendous energy, constant application and unusual self-denial and sacrifice on the part of soldiers, sailors, war workers and the general civilian population. Unless there is an occasional let-up there will inevitably follow a let down or perhaps even a crack-up. This cannot be permitted because it would lead directly to defeat. It is for this reason that troops and crews are given a period of rest and recreation after each campaign is concluded, so that they may carry through the next action with the same verve and esprit de corps. Whenever and whenever possible those in the services are permitted to spend a brief vacation either at home or in some nearby community where for a little while they may get their minds off their duties. In this way a constant stream of refreshed troops and crews are taking the places of those wearied and worn by the strain of battle and behind-the-lines service.

What is only now beginning to be understood widely is that civilian morale is equally as important as military morale, and perhaps even more so. A nation today can be defeated and forced to surrender even though its armies and navy are intact, if the civilian population is unable to supply the arms, ammunition, airplanes, ships, clothing, shoes and a thousand other items needed in sufficient quantity and of sufficient quality to completely equip the armed forces. On the other hand, an army or navy may be completely defeated and yet the nation may win the war if civilian production can be kept up.

The German nation cracked first from within in 1918 and was compelled to surrender although its armies and its navy were intact and quite capable of continuing the war. The Russian nation was defeated in 1917 and forced out of the war chiefly because it was unable to supply its armies and navy with the tools and weapons of victory. On the other hand, British morale and production remained high after the rout in Belgium and Northern France and the loss of Hong Kong, Malaya and Burma, and it was this steady stream of weapons and equipment to the fighting fronts which has turned defeat into victory in the Mediterranean area.

Modern war is primarily a conflict of rival technologies. The side which can produce the most machines and get them to the armed forces will win in the long run. The importance of war production is therefore quite obvious, and the morale of those who are producing war goods and those who are victualing and servicing the war workers becomes of prime importance to national independence and sovereignty.

Just as the soldier, sailor and marine must have rest and recreation, so must the civilian worker. If the armed forces crack, a battle or campaign is lost; if the civilian workers crack, the war is lost. For without adequate arms in sufficient quantity, the best army and navy in the world must inevitably surrender.

So, in a nation at war, every place of rest and recreation takes on a new and vital importance, and no nation can afford to neglect these facilities or to make it difficult or impossible to reach them. This is particularly true in the case of recreation places for colored war workers and other civilians because there are so few of them, and many are not entirely adequate. In most communities the colored people have very limited recreational facilities from which to choose because of the color bar. This condition is being remedied slowly by the opening of new theaters, restaurants, and night clubs, bowling alleys, etc., but much too slowly to cope with the problem which has grown more serious with the rapid expansion of population in numerous urban centers having large war contracts. Moreover, many of the recreation places available for Negroes fall short of supplying those wholesome surroundings which are desirable for health's sake in a time when the whole nation must be physically fit for the job in hand.

This situation is a challenge and an opportunity to Negro business. Never before has there been such a demand for recreation and never before has there been so much money available for recreation, despite the high taxes and purchases of war bonds. Neither the federal government nor other capital is going to invest very much money, if any, in establishing recreational facilities for Negroes. We cannot expect the government to do this when it rarely does it for white people except in the most remote areas where no facilities whatever exist. And the need for Negro facilities is not understood by most white investors. Even if it were, the enterprises in which they might be disposed to invest might not be the kind colored people would regard as wholesome.

The Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. in many swelling Negro districts are trying in a small way to cope with this problem but in the very nature of the situation they can do no more than scratch the surface. The churches, of course, have always had some sort of recreational program, especially the large and socially-conscious congregations. But it is clear that something much more is needed and that a great deal of money can be made and a fine social service performed by those business men who grasp this opportunity.

There are scores of rapidly expanding colored communities that have no adequate ballroom, no public tennis courts, no swimming pools, no golf links, no bowling alleys and not even a first class picnic ground or bathing beach. Undoubtedly there is sufficient money in every colored community to furnish such facilities if properly organized. This would not be a merely a war-time investment. The need for wholesome recreational facilities will exist after the war because the Negro urban population is everywhere increasing rapidly.

Because of the recreational color bar and the widespread discrimination against Negroes still existing in war industry and the armed services, Negro morale is lower than that of any group. In time this will be reflected in decreased productivity and so constitute a weakness on the home front. To offset this tendency more recreational facilities are needed at once. Since no other agency seems disposed to attack this problem forthrightly and adequately, the job must be done by those most concerned.

Smuts Speaks

'segregation'—separate institutions for the two elements of the population living in their own separate areas. . . . Institutional segregation carried with it territorial segregation." Partly as a result of their failure to provide sufficient land for the Africans, many Africans had become urbanized. Segregation could not be carried out in industry, even though competition and antagonism for which no solution had been found resulted. He repeated his opposition to a statutory Colour Bar and expressed his satisfaction that no attempt had been made to apply it in practice. In fact, "industrial as distinguished from territorial segregation would be both impracticable and an offence against the modern conscience."

Perhaps the most difficult problem arose from the fact that the urbanized Africans "claim to be civilized and Europeanized, and do not wish to be thrust back into the seclusion of their former tribal associations, or to forego their new place in the sun among the whites." This fact should be a "lesson to all the younger British communities farther north to prevent as much as possible the detachment of the native from his tribal connection, and to enforce from the very start the system of segregation with its separate native institutions." Although it had proved impossible in South Africa in the past to keep African families in their own reserves, it was possible to do so today. "The power of Government and the reach of the law are to-day very different from what they were under the primitive conditions of the old Cape frontier." Through segregation except in industry and through local self-government "the white man's civilization and the steadily progressing native culture will live side by side and react on each other, and the problems of their contact will provide a fruitful theme for the statesmen of the future."<sup>18</sup>

"Patient as the Ass"

After delivering these lectures, Smuts came to the United States and spoke in Town Hall, New York City, on January 9, 1930. He declared that "efforts to impose the civilization of the white race upon Africa's aboriginal population could result only in bolshevizing the native and making him a menace to the rest of the world." He deplored detribalisation, saying that there is a great deal of good in African culture since "for one thing, the African is a Socialist. Standardisation of peoples might be a fine thing in the United States but in Africa you must build on the African foundation." He warned that any change in the African cultural system should be made without violence. "The native laborer in the copper mines of Rhodesia and other parts should not be allowed to take his women folk and children with him. 'Let them remain in their tribal areas,' he urged. Do not bring them to be contaminated by white civilization which, after all, is perhaps only an experiment."

A Negro quartet had sung some spirituals which General Smuts had applauded. "He recalled the slave songs of old, trudging across a continent singing their songs and referred to them as the 'most patient of all, next to the ass.'" The late Dr. Robert Russa Moton asked him what he meant. "General Smuts hastened to correct the impression that might have been given. 'Far from wanting to insult the natives of Africa or any negroes,' he declared, 'I was expressing my admiration for the natives.'"<sup>19</sup>

At a luncheon the next day "he again warned against attempting to force white civilization on the African natives, declaring that the result would be disastrous and lead to a racial problem so tremendous that it would be well nigh impossible to cope with it. General Smuts characterized the negroes of Africa as 'child peoples.'" He praised the military qualities of Negroes from the time of Hannibal to the First World War and urged "that something be done to regulate the racial contacts. 'Unless we are wisely guided in our relations in Africa,' he warned, 'the civilized world may find itself up against a most dangerous economic and social situation in the generations to come.'"<sup>20</sup>

Fear of Black Armies

Italian designs on Ethiopia in 1935 caused him to fear that bitterness and resentment against the white man might become general in Africa. "Another danger had also to be borne in mind. Unfortunately, precedents already existed for the training of black armies in Africa to take part in general war and not merely in defense of local territory. He feared very much that the annexation of Abyssinia or its domination by a great European power would mean the training of the biggest and the most dangerous black army the world had seen. It was not difficult to picture what the consequences of such development might be on the African Continent and further afield. The growing struggle of races and colours was one of the most ominous signs of the present world situation.

And the conquest of Abyssinia and the training of its splendid military material might be a menace to the peace and order they had laboriously tried to build up in Europe after the Great War."<sup>23</sup>

In 1936 he spoke in favor of a Representative Council for the Africans, but he did not deem it wise to grant it legislative powers until its success as an advisory body had been established.

"The Pan-African Ideal" was the subject of an important address that he delivered in 1940. The whole Continent of Africa South of the Equator, especially the British territories therein, were a "matter of economic interest and concern, and the Union can only realize its destiny, even within its own borders, by keeping that larger point of view before itself." This was no policy of jingoistic imperialism, he asserted, against the other European powers, but the question "affects the economic interests and development of us all, and in a large cultural sense, the destiny of us all as co-workers in the cause of European civilization in this Continent."<sup>24</sup>

Finally, "Trusteeship"

On January 21, 1942, the Prime Minister delivered one of his most recent and most widely discussed lectures, "The Basis of Trusteeship in African Native Policy." Since there have been various interpretations of what he said, it is important to note that this summary and the quotations are taken from the pamphlet published by The South African Institute of Race Relations before which he delivered the lecture. In it he reminded his audience that one school had favored equality and another, the superiority of the white race over the black. More recently, the idea of trusteeship had come to the fore. He agreed with Rhodes that this relationship should be that of guardian and ward. This idea of trusteeship, "bypasses that barren controversy concerning who is higher and who is lower, that barren controversy between equality and superiority, which for a century and more produced nothing except ill-feeling and bitterness."

Trusteeship in Africa was made difficult by various factors. Fear dominated the minds of the whites since they were in the minority. Difference in cultural levels between whites and blacks had up to the present time prevented the whites from finding the right way of translating trusteeship into better relations in practice. The emphasis on race in modern times had further complicated the problem. South Africa had tried to get around the fear by a policy of segregation. "But I am afraid, Ladies and Gentlemen, that there is very great disappointment at the result which has been achieved. . . . How can it be otherwise? The whole trend in this country and throughout Africa has been in the opposite direction. . . . Isolation has gone in South Africa and it has gone for good. . . . There has been in recent years a migration of Africans to this country on a colossal scale. The attractions of South Africa for Africans has been overpowering. . . . The result has been that there has been an intermixture of the various native tribes, and of the population generally in South Africa which was never dreamt of before. Isolation has gone and segregation has fallen on evil days."

Segregation had failed to keep the Africans in their reserves. The urbanization of the Africans had been, indeed, a "revolutionary change." This urbanization meant detribalization and industrialization of the African. Some persons were inclined, in the face of this new situation, to emphasize the old ideal of racial superiority. But "the fundamental aspect of trusteeship is the responsibility which the trustee has towards his ward. The whole concept is meant, not for the benefit of the trustee, but for the benefit of those whom he has to look after." While there was an ethical aspect to trusteeship, enlightened self-interest also made it necessary. Moreover, unless the Europeans fulfill their obligations of trusteeship, there is grave danger that the "fairly happy relation existing between European and Africans on this Continent" might not continue.

In many respects—education, health, housing, feeding—they were not fulfilling their duty to the African. "If he is not much more, he is the beast of burden; he is the worker and you need him. He is carrying this country on his back. . . . I am not talking high politics—I am not talking of the franchise—"

Urban Segregation Approved

"Generally, our natives for good and sufficient reasons, which I quite approve of, have been put apart in the urban areas; they have been segregated and given their own townships to live in." But the cost of living was high in those segregated areas; the Africans were a long way from their place of work and they had to pay their way to and from work. "The result, Ladies and Gentlemen, is that conditions are arising which certainly cannot be tolerated."

South Africa had accepted the idea of trusteeship. He had been greatly cheered by news of the friendly relations between not only the black South Africans and the white South Africans fighting in North Africa but also by the friendly relations between Negroes from other parts of Africa with the white South African troops. These facts show "that there is a good and sound basis to build on for the future of this country, if we will follow the light and if we will do our duty as trustees. . . . Our hope and our faith is that both races will manage to live together in a spirit of helpful co-operation—in other words, that they will improve their relations so as to be helpful to each other, and on the basis of trusteeship see their future as the years go by."<sup>25</sup>

Smuts has spoken. There is no need to recapitulate his views on specific questions. One fact is crystal clear. Under whatever guise he may present his end policy, good-will, justice or trusteeship, segregation is the fundamental basis. The only exception is the unescapable need of using Africans in industry so that South Africa may maintain her important position in world affairs. But even in the cities the industrialized Africans must be segregated. At a time when most planners for a just and durable peace are talking about breaking down even national loyalties, when we are being told that that no place on the globe is more than sixty hours from any other, when we are being assured that this is the "Century of the Common Man," Smuts still advocates the medieval ghetto for Africans not only in the Union of South Africa but for all of British East Africa. Like the Bourbons of old, he seems not to be able to learn or to forget.

Along the N. A. A. C. P. Battlefront

Riot Report Blames Negroes: The report on the Detroit riot by Governor Harry F. Kelly's Fact Finding commission, as published in the Detroit dailies August 11, blames Negroes for the riot and praises the police force, saying "the ordinary law enforcement and judicial agencies have thus far adequately and properly dealt with law violators."

Two members of the governor's committee were Prosecuting Attorney William E. Dowling of Wayne County (which includes Detroit) who made a statement several weeks ago blaming the NAACP by name for the riot, and Detroit Police Commissioner John E. Witherspoon, whose police force killed 17 of the 25 dead Negroes, while permitting white mobs to roam at will and beat up Negroes, even those under the "protection" of the police.

The NAACP said Witherspoon's presence on the committee "is undoubtedly responsible for this whitewashing of the police force."

"Negroes," said the NAACP, "have asked nothing but simple justice and the report to the governor calls them agitators."

"The text of the report by the Fact Finding committee is not really a finding of fact, but an attempt by law enforcement officials of Detroit and Wayne county to cover the defection and derelictions of the Detroit police by blaming Negroes for the riot."

"The accusations are directed against all types of Negroes, from teen-aged ruffians to Negro editors, civic leaders, and heads of local and national organizations."

"Fully one-third of the digested text as reported in the Detroit dailies, August 11, concerns itself with minutely detailed descriptions of what the report describes as 'disconnected incidents provoked by a group of Negroes.'

"Violence of whites against Negroes is dismissed summarily in a short paragraph, despite the fact it is asserted this violence extended over a period of twenty hours, from 4:00 a. m., June 21, until 11.00 p. m. that same day. During this period more than 1,500 persons were arrested of whom 85% were Negroes. Seventeen of the 25 slain Negroes were killed by police."

"This committee had before it abundant evidence, including a report from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of wholly unjustifiable killing and other violence by police. To ignore all of this and to conclude that 'the ordinary law enforcement agencies have thus far adequately and properly dealt with the law violators' is conclusive evidence of the bias which characterizes the report."

"This report solves nothing, further embitters Negroes and destroys any lingering vestige of confidence in the law enforcement authorities."

Although Mayor Jeffries had been won over to the idea of calling a special grand jury to investigate the riot, after the governor's committee made its report the city council of Detroit overrode the mayor's request and decided not to call up a grand jury. Only Councilman George Edwards, the transplanted Texan who has a consistent record of fairness to Negroes, voted for the grand jury. By vote of the council the Detroit riot, the worst in the country in the last quarter century, is now a "closed book."

Biddle Denies Migration Ban: Attorney General Francis Biddle, in a roundabout way, has denied that there are any plans on foot to restrict or stop the migration of Negroes to war production centers. Mr. Biddle's denial was contained in a letter to Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, after a great furor had been created by the publication of two stories in the New York Post and the full text of a memorandum alleged to have been sent by Biddle under date of July 15 to President Roosevelt. This memorandum, printed by the newspaper PM, did recommend the restriction of migration by Negroes and did suggest "that no more Negroes should move into Detroit."

The memorandum said the recommendations were based upon an investigation of the Detroit riot by an FBI man sent especially by Mr. Biddle.

Mr. Biddle's letter to Mr. Granger did not deny that a recommendation had been made to restrict migration. In fact, Mr. Biddle refused to discuss the memorandum, saying it was a confidential document to the President whose contents he could not reveal. He merely denied that any plans were underway to bar migration; but he did add in cautious language that "migrations necessarily contain the seeds of future dislocation . . . (and) responsible officials should give careful consideration to the extent of required facilities before taking any steps to fill the particular manpower requirements."

The NAACP, in a statement by Walter White, condemned the proposal as "obviously illegal, unsound and destructive of public confidence. The inequity and injustice of the proposal are appalling."

Roosevelt, Churchill Queried: At their August conference in Quebec, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill were urged to consider the problem of the color line in the matter of victory and peace. A telegram was dispatched to the conference by the NAACP in which Walter White said "May I respectfully urge in your deliberations consideration of practical means of inclusion of welfare of colored peoples of the world . . . we know you both are aware of the need of solving this question."

"Manna" to Axis: Race riots in America create "a picture of conditions in our country that is manna from Heaven to the Axis" according to a letter from Major Myron Weitz of Cleveland, Ohio, serving in North Africa. In his letter to the Cleveland Plaindealer Major Weitz wrote, "Both white and black are fighting this war over here, and they should be fighting it shoulder to shoulder back home. I should not think that these rioters need be reminded that Negroes have been killed, wounded and taken captives on all fronts. They were on those various fronts to protect the people back home from the very things that are occurring."

Soldiers Get Death Sentence: After deliberating 5 hours and 45 minutes on July 30 a military court consisting of 2 colonels, a major, 2 captains and 3 lieutenants brought in a verdict of guilty and the death sentence for 3 Negro soldiers, Privates Richard Adams, John Bordenave and Lawrence Mitchell on a charge of rape. The crime was alleged to have been committed last July on one Rose Mason, white, in Camp Claiborne, Louisiana.

The court martial was held at Camp Maxey, Texas.

The men had been tried and convicted in the United States District Court in Louisiana last summer, but NAACP attorneys, led by Thurgood Marshall, went to the United States supreme court and secured an opinion which in effect set aside the convictions because the original court technically did not have the authority to try the men. The army then took them over and set the court martial for Camp Maxey on July 28.

Mr. Marshall said the testimony was so contradictory that he believes the Board of Review will not sustain the verdict. Principal item against the men was a series of verbal and written "confessions" introduced by the prosecutor over the objection of defense counsel. The defendants claim the confessions were secured by force while they were in custody of Louisiana civil authorities.

The men were defended at the court martial by 2 army officers and Mr. Marshall. The latter has made application to file briefs and to appear before the Judge Advocate General in Washington when the case comes up for review.

Atlanta Teachers File Suit: Preliminary argument will be heard sometime this fall on a suit brought by Samuel L. Davis, a teacher in the Booker T. Washington high school of Atlanta, Georgia, against the Board of Education seeking to equalize the salaries of Negro teachers and principals with the salaries received by white teachers of the same status and experience. A. T. Walden of Atlanta and Thurgood Marshall are acting for Mr. Davis.

Harlem Riot: The widespread resentment among all classes of Negro citizens to the treatment their men have been receiving in the Army was one of the principal contributing factors to the disorders in Harlem on the night of August 1, according to Walter White, NAACP secretary, in a letter to Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War.

The spark which touched off the Harlem riot and looting spree was a report that a Negro soldier had been shot and killed by a white policeman. The report was not true because the soldier was only slightly wounded, but the mere report, with the background of mistreatment of Negro soldiers elsewhere in the country, was sufficient to touch off the destructive rampage which did five million dollars' worth of damage. The NAACP letter said:

"It was the fury born of repeated, unchecked, unpunished, and often unrebuked shooting, maiming, and insulting of Negro troops, particularly in the southern states, which started the disorders."

"Mr. Secretary, we fear, and we are not alone in that fear, that unless the War and Justice Departments muster courage enough to handle this situation without gloves, other trouble may ensue born of the sense of frustration and resentment bordering on despair among Negroes. We, therefore, take the liberty of asking and urging you and the Attorney General, both of whom we know to be shocked by the coldblooded mistreatment of Negro soldiers, to confer immediately and to work out an affirmative and uncompromising program of action."

In celebration of a successful membership drive the Youth Council of the Greenwich branch held a meeting July 25 at which the speaker was E. Harold Mason of New York on the topic "Living Courageously." The famous "Ballad for Americans" was sung by a mixed chorus under direction of Alver W. Napper. The principal speech was delivered by Dr. Frank S. Horne, chief of the race relations office of the Federal Public Housing Authority. Mayor Albert W. James and Stanley B. Hearn, chairman of the Wilmington Housing Authority also spoke. Southbridge cost $814,000 and will house more than 670 persons in 33 buildings.

Iowa: The Waterloo branch cancelled its annual Emancipation picnic and dance usually held August 4. President Milton F. Fields said the action was taken because so many young people who ordinarily attend were either in the armed forces or in war work.

Milton F. Fields, an attorney of Waterloo, was elected president of the Iowa State Conference of Branches at the fourth annual meeting in July in Marshalltown. The delegates adopted a resolution asking Governor Bourke B. Hickenlooper to integrate Negroes into the Iowa state guard. Another resolution called upon President Roosevelt to stop "mistreatment of Negroes in the armed forces and discrimination against those employed in war plants."

Later at the celebration there was a jitterbug contest with music by Skippy Hawkins and his band. The USO and service men from Camp Phillips had a part in the program. George Brock and Raymond Overton had charge of arrangements.

Because a bathing beauty parade was scheduled as part of an Emancipation day celebration on Sunday, August 8, the Hutchinson branch of which George Van Hook is president, passed a resolution protesting the display of girls in bathing suits on Sunday. The Lincoln Day club, sponsors of the celebration for the past 18 years, announced that it was giving up the feature because of the NAACP resolution. Mr. Van Hook said he did not think a bathing beauty contest proper on a Sunday. He agreed that a bathing beauty contest is enjoyable, but said: "We have six days for enjoyment and we should leave the seventh for doing good." James A. Woodson, general manager of the celebration, said the affair was being held on Sunday to enable colored soldiers from nearby Camp Phillips to attend on week end passes. "We are calling off the contest," he said, "to avoid trouble, but we are not happy about it."

The Coffeyville branch launched a membership campaign August 1 at a meeting at Sardis Baptist church. The following program was rendered:

Women's quartet directed by Mrs. James Buckner; song fest by church choirs of the city; vocal solos by Misses Venus Anderson of Coffeyville, Barbara Roberts of Ft. Scott and Mrs. Ozzie Yountz, Coffeyville; group singing led by Mrs. Roy Grubbs; principal address by R. W. Cartwright; and group discussions led by Mrs. W. J. Johnson and G. R. Richardsohn.

Carl R. Johnson, president of the Kansas City, Mo., branch, was the speaker in July for the closing meeting of the Parsons branch membership campaign, which brought in 110 new members.

Senator Arthur Capper addressed the Topeka branch Sunday night August 8 on recent happenings in Washington. Senator Capper is a national vice president of the NAACP and in 1915 was president of the Topeka branch. He was introduced by R. J. Reynolds, president of the branch. in mid-September, with Randall L. Tyus, branch executive secretary, in charge. Prior to this year the Baltimore branch under the militant leadership of Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson has been second only to Detroit, Mich., in size, although hard-pressed at all times by Chicago. This year, however, Houston, Tex., and Los Angeles, Calif., have both passed the 7,000 mark in members. The ranking now stands: Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, Baltimore, Chicago. Los Angeles expects to have 10,000 before October 1. Chicago is launching a campaign in September for 20,000 to try to tie Detroit. Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Tyus are making no boasts, but Mrs. Jackson told the national office on a visit there early in August that Baltimore would get "more than" 12,000—how many more she did not say. Anyone who knows her knows that Baltimore will be up there with the leaders when the campaign smoke settles down on October 15.

Missouri: Speakers for the Jefferson City branch panel discussion at the July meeting were N. P. Barksdale, the Rev. C. B. Johnson, Dr. Mabel Smythe, Dr. Lorenzo J. Greene, Robert S. Cobb, and Milton G. Hardinman.

New Jersey: The Passaic branch has written a letter of appreciation to Police Commissioner Julius Cinamon for prompt police action in the "Summer Street Incident." Praise was also given to Police Chief Charles J. Monks. The letter said in part: "We are happy to know that you and your chief of police, Charles J. Monks possess a spirit of fair play and justice for all." Chief Monks has become known throughout northern New Jersey for his efforts to preserve order and keep down racial tensions by absolute fair play; punishment for the guilty, white or black; advice to the wayward; and counsel with Negro and white community leaders before a situation develops.

The Trenton branch has written a letter of thanks to the daily newspapers for their aid in publicizing the recent successful membership campaign which netted 1,100 members.

The Jersey City branch has concluded a membership campaign which brought in 500 new members, bringing the total on the books to 993. They hope to have 500 more members by October 1. Mrs. Mary E. Pope directed the campaign, which was launched with a showing of the NAACP color movie, "On Guard," and an address by Alfred Baker Lewis of Peekskill, N. Y., national board member. Awards were presented the following workers for the memberships brought in: first, Nathaniel Johnson, 342 members, $448; second, Mrs. Hannah Greene, 276 members, $310; third, Felix J. Isom, 159 members, $195; fourth, E. J. French, 100 members, $132.

Reid, from the board of directors of the Pyramid Club, and a traveling bag by Dr. J. Maurice Vaughan on behalf of the NAACP.

In response, Dr. Wiggins, summarizing work and accomplishment of the group, stated he was only a symbol of the efforts and hard work of the officers and members of Camden NAACP.

Since reorganization in 1940 the membership has grown to 1400 members.

Through the labor committee hundreds of Negro workers have found employment as semi-skilled and skilled workers at R.C.A., Eavenson and Levering Wool Washing Plant, Campbell Soup company, and New York Shipyard where we have now more than 2,000 men and women in comparison to 200 formerly employed there.

Lampkin who is directing our membership drive for 2500 members. "Go-to-high-school, go-to-college" movement will be the theme of education committee.

A fight will be made for admittance of Negro teachers into junior high schools and high schools of Camden.

New York: The Glen Cove branch has scheduled its meetings for every two months because of gasoline rationing and transportation difficulties.

William Brooks has replaced Pvt. F. Ransom Banks as chairman of the membership committee of the Port Chester branch. Fifteen memberships were reported in July and a steady campaign will continue through September. The education committee reports five graduates from Port Chester high school and four from Rye high school.

Allan Wilcox of the Great Neck branch was among those who conferred in July with J. Russell Sprague, county executive, and with James E. Stiles, publisher of the Nassau Daily Review Star, about a series of editorials appearing in the paper on "mugging." The group denounced the editorials as incitement to racial strife and asked the cooperation of all leaders in the county to develop interracial cooperation.

At a special election July 26 Benjamin Morrell was elected president of the Mamaroneck branch to succeed Wellington Waters.

A seven-point plan to eliminate racial discrimination and thus wipe out community tensions was presented August 6 to the Buffalo branch by Edward L. Carter, Jr., and Victor Einach of the Buffalo Committee on Discrimination in Employment. The seven points:

"1—Abolish the Jim Crow policy of the armed forces.

"2—Abolish separate blood banks for Negroes.

"3—Assure adequate Negro representation on the police force, not only in the Negro community but throughout the city.

"4—Bring about equal housing opportunities for all regardless of race, color, creed or national origin.

"5—Realize more adequate recreational facilities for Negroes.

"6—Eliminate employment discrimination.

"7—Persuade merchants to give full dollar, ration point and quality value to Negroes."

David B. Adams, president of the Nassau county branch, was inducted into the army August 1. As president of the branch he was active in securing work in war plants for colored people on Long Island. Mrs. Adams is employed at the Grumman Aircraft corporation in Bethpage, builders of Navy airplanes.

charge of H. L. LaGrone, branch president.

Burney, Louis Fourte, and President Lyle Matthews. The NAACP color movie, "On Guard," was shown. Mrs. Louis Fourte reported on the work of her anti-poll tax committee. The branch continues to work on war housing for colored workers and on rationing.

John F. Lopez, president of the Providence branch, is among the white and colored leaders of the community at work on an interracial committee to prevent incidents of racial friction from becoming serious. One pressing problem is that of recreation for colored people. An increasing number of colored soldiers is passing through or visiting in the city. Numbers of white soldiers from the South have created situations in some of the restaurants, but the committee believes it has the situation in hand.

Tennessee: The newly organized Kingsport branch is now formally at work under the leadership of the Rev. R. J. Kennedy, president. The Rev. G. Parks is vice president, Will Patton treasurer, and Emmett Collins, secretary. A clear statement of the aims of the NAACP was given by Rev. Kennedy to the Kingsport Times in answer to the charge that colored people of Kingsport have organized "to bring about bad race relations."

Texas: The Port Arthur branch is concluding a summer campaign for new members.

West Virginia: Joe Abbott, vice president of the Triadelphia branch spoke at Sarah Ann July 25 and secured several new members.

Color

I am the color of the Earth.
I have rested on her shoulder.
Wept tears on her bosom,
Sung songs at her heart.
I am the color of the Earth.

I am the color of the Road.
I have shaped tired feet in its dust,
Trode on its rocks,
Stumbled up its hills,
Sped down its straight stretch.
I am the color of the Road.

I am the color of the Sun
I have waked to his lusty call,
Dreamed in his nooning
Toiled in his after-glow.
I am the color of the Sun.

Sun,
Earth,
And shining Road!

Brown
Tan
And golden glow!

God-given

Long War and Negro

ing soldiers witnessed three major race riots and the rebirth of the Ku Klux Klan. To serve one's country in time of war is an inescapable obligation of citizenship; to expect such service to furnish a preface to racial understanding is to misread the record.

As an integral part of America, the Negro can scarcely hope to benefit by a situation that retards the general progress. A long war will mean the starvation of millions in China, Russia and the occupied countries and the loss of additional millions of lives in the active theatres of war. The Negro cannot dissociate himself from the graver impact of a long war—the sense of frustration that arises from deferred hopes and a constantly lowering standard of living. In an international struggle the Negro has a community of interest with his fellow-Americans; he must take care lest his segregation become spiritual.

To date in this war the Negro has acquitted himself with fortitude in the face of a mountain of discrimination. He is understandably restless. He wants something done about his wrongs. A short war should conduce to this goal. With the war at end—with the civilizing spirit once more in the ascendant, Americans of good will can address themselves anew to the unfinished business of democracy.

R. W. Bagnall Dies

Dr. Robert W. Bagnall of Philadelphia, Pa., who for 12 years, from 1921 to 1933, was director of branches for the NAACP, died August 20. Funeral services were held August 24 in Philadelphia.

After his resignation from the NAACP in 1933, Dr. Bagnall was called to St. Thomas, one of the two oldest Episcopal parishes in Philadelphia.

It was during his pastorate of St. Matthews Episcopal church in Detroit, Michigan, that Rev. Bagnall became interested in the NAACP. He did a great deal of volunteer work making speeches and organizing branches in what was then known as the Great Lakes region of the NAACP. His work was so outstanding that he was persuaded to take a leave of absence from the ministry and accept the position of director of branches. Under the direction of Rev. Bagnall during the next 12 years the branch department expanded and became the backbone of the NAACP. Mr. Bagnall travelled thousands of miles for the Association and delivered lectures before colleges, forum groups, women's clubs and, of course, branches of the Association. He was a brilliant orator and became known to NAACP delegates for his stirring keynote addresses at annual conferences. In commenting upon Rev. Bagnall's death, Walter White said:

"It is a great shock to hear of Bob Bagnall's death, his passing is a great personal loss to all of us in the NAACP who worked with him. He was a compelling speaker and did much to build the Association as a force for justice for the Negro."

Their crying stirred in Rebellious longing to be free:

Free as air and the four

READ! UNDERSTAND!

THE WAR FOR EMPIRE IN ASIA

Harry Paxton Howard

author of the sensational "Americans in Concentration Camps" in THE CRISIS last September, has written a sensational new book

AMERICA'S ROLE IN ASIA

(Howell, Soskin, $3)

THE CRITICS SAY:

"Sharpest, most revealing, most biting factual book on the Far East. . . . No more scathing denunciation of Anglo-American imperialism in the Far East has been penned. . . .
It's a 'must.'"
George S. Schuyler
(Pittsburgh Courier).

"Fresh and imaginative and free from any taint of nationalist propaganda. . . . The author starts out from the proposition that there will be and can be no restoration of the status quo in Asia."
William Henry Chamberlin
(New York Times).

"Mr. Howard is a truthful historian. . . . Such true Jeffersonian faith in mass common sense, irrespective of breed, and such a readiness to fight for it, are so rare these days that I should like to see him widely and understandingly read."
Rodney Gilbert
(New York Herald-Tribune).

"It is impossible to convey the wealth of Harry Howard's material. He knows the Far East as teacher and as a member of its labor movement. He saw Chiang Kai-shek's fascist blueshirts in action; he also knows Japanese working people."
Sam Halper
(New York Post).

Mr. Howard's book goes to the core of the problem. It is hard medicine for the complacent—a pill without sugar-coating."

I. D. W. Talmadge
(Book of the Month Club News).

"This is the most valuable and illuminating book on the public affairs and personalities of the Far East which has yet been published."
Harry Elmer Barnes
(The Progressive).

"It is a good thing for us that somebody had the courage to write a book like this. . . . It will open the eyes of everybody who has a sense of justice and believes in the fitness of things."
Marshall R. Hall
(Ohio State Journal).

"This is a book you must read. . . . It tells you the things you must know about the Far East, but are not permitted to know—the things which are being kept from you."
Bertrand Russell.

"A book which reveals with complete frankness the unsavory history of Western relations with the East."
H. W. B.
(India Today).

"Harry Paxton Howard . . . knows what he is talking about. He sees what the thing is . . . something very big indeed. . . . It is a general rebellion of all who are not of the European (American) white races by all of those whose skins are colored. It is a revolution as well as a rebellion. It is a war to seize all the wealth of Asia and Africa from the flabby hands of those who have heretofore ruled 'the lesser breeds.'"
William Franklin Sands
(The Commonwealth).

"The book is a reflection of some twenty-five years of study, observation and first-hand experience, and not a traveler's or newly arrived correspondent's first thoughts. It will cause no little stir."
Nathaniel Peffer
